Philosophy After Hiroshima

Edited by

Edward Demenchonok
CONTENTS

Foreword ........................................................................................................................................x
Fred Dallmayr

Introduction .................................................................................................................................1
From Power Politics to the Ethics of Peace
Edward Demenchonok

Part I. Remembering the Past to Envision the Future

Chapter One ....................................................................................................................................43
Nuclear Weapons and Philosophy in the Twenty-First Century:
The Relevance of Initial Philosophical Responses to the Atomic Bomb
William C. Gay

Chapter Two ....................................................................................................................................69
International Newspaper Coverage of the 60th Anniversary of the Hiroshima Bombing
Yasuhiro Inoue and Carol Rinnert

Chapter Three .............................................................................................................................97
Aches and Roses: Response and Responsibility after Auschwitz and Hiroshima
Edith Krause

Part II. Nuclear Amnesia and the Metaphysics of New Warfare

Chapter Four ..............................................................................................................................121
Citing Hiroshima: Nuclear Amnesia and Atomic Bomb Testimony
Robin Gerster
Preface

Chapter Five ................................................................................................................. 141
War, Space, and Reversal: Paul Virilio’s Apocalypse
Graham Harman

Chapter Six ..................................................................................................................... 159
Hiroshima, the American Empire, and the U.S. War in Iraq
Rodney Peffer

Chapter Seven ............................................................................................................... 203
From Hiroshima to Baghdad: Military Hegemony versus Just Military Preparedness
Harry van der Linden

Chapter Eight ............................................................................................................... 233
Robert L. Ivie

Part III. The Universality of the Ideal of Peace in a Culturally Diverse World

Chapter Nine ............................................................................................................... 265
The Anti-war Philosophy in Early Daoism
Keping Wang

Chapter Ten ............................................................................................................... 289
Is Nothing More Important than Forgiveness? Hiroshima, Hegel, and the Speculative Truths of Forgiveness
Chris Fox

Chapter Eleven ........................................................................................................... 311
The Case for Lasting Peace
Albert Anderson

Chapter Twelve .......................................................................................................... 331
Human Rights: Imperial Designs versus Cosmopolitan Order
Edward Demenchonok

Chapter Thirteen ....................................................................................................... 399
The Popoki Peace Project: Creating New Spaces for Peace
Ronni Alexander
Part IV. Toward the Philosophy of Creativity and Dialogue

Chapter Fourteen ................................................................. 419
Philosophy as Global Dialogue and the Rejection of Gratuitous
Military Violence
William L. McBride

Chapter Fifteen ................................................................. 431
Conflicted Modernity: Toleration as a Principle of Justice
David M. Rasmussen

Chapter Sixteen ................................................................. 447
Rethinking Cultural Diversity: Intercultural Discourse and Transculture
Edward Demenchonok

Chapter Seventeen .............................................................. 477
On Creativity in Philosophy: Toward Cultural Proteism and Philosophy of the Possible
Mikhail Epstein

Contributors ............................................................................. 513

Index of Names ........................................................................ 519

Subject Index ............................................................................ 525
Philosophy after Hiroshima offers a philosophical analysis of the issues surrounding war and peace, and their challenges to ethics. It reminds us that the threat posed to civilization by nuclear weapons persists, as does the need for continuing philosophical reflection on the nature of war, the problem of violence, and the need for a workable ethics in the nuclear age.

The book recalls the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki as the beginning of the nuclear age, the Cold War, and subsequently of the hegemonic unilaterialism of the sole superpower. Reviewing early critical responses to the first atomic bombings by such figures as Camus, Sartre, Russell, Dewey, Heidegger and others, the authors themselves respond to contemporary threats to peace, including the US “global war on terrorism,” the recrudescence of militarism, and the continuation of imperial power politics by other means. In the nuclear age, the use of military force as a political instrument threatens the future of humanity. This poses formidable challenges to philosophy and calls for its transformation.

In using memories of the atomic bombings to help us to grasp the moral implications of the current escalation of global violence, the authors hope to show the urgent relevance of nonviolence in the contemporary context. Drawing on a range of philosophical traditions—Taoist and Western—the contributors take up a welter of philosophical and political concerns of topical interest, including human rights, international relations, toleration, the politics of memory, intercultural dialogue, the ethics of co-responsibility, and the possibility of a cosmopolitan order of law and peace. Going beyond postmodernism and deconstruction, several of the authors develop a constructive paradigm of thinking—a philosophy of the possible and a new methodology for the realization of the creative potential of the humanities. Philosophy is viewed as a peace-promoting global dialogue.

Edward Demenchonok is Professor of Foreign Languages and Philosophy at Fort Valley State University, USA. He is the past president of the International Society for Universal Dialogue. His numerous books and articles are in the fields of the philosophy of culture, social philosophy, and ethics. He is the editor of the book Between Global Violence and Ethics of Peace: Philosophical Perspectives (Wiley-Blackwell 2009).